

Kenyon International Emergency Services Launches an Online Discussion Board for Aviation Emergency Managers and Planners

For Immediate Release

(Houston, Texas, USA) Kenyon International Emergency Services, the world's leading disaster management company, is pleased to introduce its new online Discussion Board for aviation emergency managers and planners. The creation of the Discussion Board is in conjunction with the launch of Kenyon's new Aviation Emergency Response Training website.

"Aviation emergency managers and planners need a vehicle to network online," said Robert Jensen, President and CEO of Kenyon International Emergency Services. "Our Discussion Board is designed to encourage aviation emergency managers and planners to collaborate with each other to build a vibrant community that is unique to the industry. In today's aviation environment, there are many emerging challenges aviation emergency managers and planners must address. The Discussion Board will serve as an exchange of best practices, and facilitate a dialogue to air common problems with possible solutions."

In addition to facilitating discussions on aviation emergency matters, the Discussion Board also has links to information on upcoming Kenyon training classes and events that can provide additional support for aviation emergency managers and planners.
